UX/UI designer on an early-stage fintech product, where I design the flows and screens and build the UI in code myself. At Broadcust, a B2B marketing platform, I found where users got stuck and proposed fixes that cut repeat status inquiries by about 20%. Before moving to tech, I spent ten years designing customer experiences at H&M and IKEA.
Maximalist in my closet, not in my interfaces.

EXPERIENCE

UX/UI Designer, Fintech Startup (stealth), Oct 2026-Present
- Own the UX/UI for an early-stage fintech product, from user flows to final screens
- Build the UI in code myself with Claude Code, and work with the developer through GitHub

Digital Creative Designer & Customer Success, Broadcust (B2B platform), 2024-2026
- Analyzed discovery calls, onboarding sessions and support tickets, and identified 4 key friction points that pushed customers off the platform
- Proposed and defined a request-status experience modeled on real-time order tracking (like Wolt). After the developer built it, repeat status inquiries dropped about 20%
- Defined a simpler content-request flow (new-request button, quick edit). 10-15% of subscribers used it in its launch month
- Proposed replacing a 15-30 minute discovery call with a self-serve digital form and wrote its questionnaire. Most clients completed it on their own
- Presented proposals to the CEO with annotated briefs for the developer
- Designed responsive landing pages and brand sites for clients, using AI tools
